Investment process

- At the core of the investment philosophy lies the belief that Macro-Thematic analysis – the identification and interpretation of major economic, political, social and cultural developments affecting the UK and the rest of the world – offers scope to add long-term investment value. A Macro-Theme is defined as an undiscounted, structural change in the process of realisation, and the related passage to theme-maturity, is the macro-trend. Macro-Thematic analysis tends to identify long duration investment opportunities that persist beyond market cycles.
- The fund managers believe a "top-down" approach is the most appropriate in identifying episodes of change, their drivers and the resultant investment opportunities. In their view, this objective cannot be attained with a "bottom-up" or company specific approach.
- Macro-Thematic investment opportunities exist because investors are bad at discounting the kind of change that defines Macro-Themes. Investors suffer from behavioural biases including herding, forecasting bias and cognitive bias. This leads to a gap between investment theory – based on the idea that investors are rational in aggregate and that asset prices efficiently discount all available information – and practice.
- Importantly, a Macro-Theme may be expressed in both positive and negative terms. The fund managers have courage in their convictions: positive themes are supported by large absolute portfolio weightings whereas negative themes may result in the complete absence from the portfolio of certain stockmarket sectors.
- The Macro-Thematic investment process consists of four stages:
 - 1. Theme discovery
 - 2. Identification of theme-assisted and theme-impaired companies
 - 3. Bottom-up analysis of prospective investments
 - 4. Portfolio construction and management

- The SRRI shown is not guaranteed to remain the same and may shift over time.

- The Fund's risk and reward category has been calculated using the methodology set by the European Commission. It is based upon the rate by which the Fund or a representative fund or index's value has moved up and down in the past.
- The Fund is categorised 5 for its exposure to equities.
- The SRRI may not fully take into account the following risks:
 - that a company may fail thus reducing its value within the Fund;
 - any company which has high overseas earnings may carry a higher currency risk;
